Biography of Hyrum Don Carlos Clark by Owen Morrell Clark

"He was quite a professional horseman."

He was exacting of hired men: no swearing or foul language.

"Father played a mouth organ."

He served on the High Council, also in the bishopric for several years.

"He always dressed neat, was well-groomed."

He was very alert, and had very sharp eyes.

"Mother knew she married a handsome man."

"He was always considered a handsome man."

He was for boys going on missions, and for protection for girls.

On a problem, "He'd think it over carefully, then speak; and his answer stayed." Example: We should "not go to public dances if not supervised by L.D.S."

Father was involved in the settlement of a dispute over lands. "Limbergs got the Big Spring, but Father was friendly and didn't seem to hold a grudge."

"Father supervised dances all over the valley, especially in Auburn and Grover. He'd go by horseback or carriage, or bob-sled."

"In disputes between sheep and cattlemen, Father was the arbiter, and Father settled it."

At the time of the Indian scare, Father stayed home. Early in the morning Chief Walker came to the door. Father gave them bread. The Indians gave him beads.

The Indians always liked Father; he was congenial with them."

They had family prayer, before breakfast and supper.

One time Edna mentioned to me that Father was going to visit the B.Y. College in Logan, and the faculty was alerted that one of the prominent men from Star Valley was going to visit the school.

"Father and Mother often sang duets."

One would often hear Father singing phrases of a song.

While traveling between Farmington and Star Valley, with horse and wagon, Father would often over-night east and north of Preston, Idaho, "where the Danes lived."
