Provenance: Given to April Clark Clive by her father John R. Clark (author)

Category: Volume
Person:
Date: 01/01/1966

A biography of Wilford Woodruff Clark told through other people called "Springdale's Patriarch", written by John R. Clark.

not wholly applicable to Idaho. Wilford W. Clark generally was, by modern-day standards, a conservative voter.

"He was interested in local control of civic responsibilities, aiming at a balanced budget and opposed to state programs if local or voluntary programs would suffice. His name is on nearly every page of the Legislative minutes as having something to say germane to the matters at hand."

- John R. Clark, 1976 essay.

"He loved America and its Constitution. He had an enviable knowledge of our government, its operations, and the institutions flowing therefrom. Few were ever more interested in our elections and the candidates. He knew the pulse of the electorate on domestic and foreign issues."

- (Judge) Leland G. Larsen, husband of LeOra Clark Larsen, 1956.

"He was a good politician and proud of his party."

- Joseph Smith Phelps, grand-nephew of Wilford, 1960.
